I have no manual, so am not sure what the switch does. I also assume the levels of temp 1 to 5 with 5 being the colder. Any help Thanks Have increased temp, and the unit now appears to be freezing the contents again. I am non plussed. I have never heard of that reason. I tried to download the instructions but was not able, as I don't know the answer to the question. I am still not sure what the little switch on the light unit does. Thanks for the reply. Click to expand. The lower position, with red showing, is for when the unit is in a cooler room temperature than 20c. With the cold spell, my fridge room is way below this, hence the reason for my freezer not working correctly. Thanks. I am so pleased. The freezer cut out last week and the contents started to thaw. The fridge section also warmed up with the water droplets on the interior back panel thawing and becoming drops of water. I realised what the problem was. The problem is that the Bosch operating instructions suggest that this should be switched on only for 24 hours. We have run it for a week and intend doing so for several more continuously. It seems to operate by activating the internal light, which apparently gives off enough warmth to fool the fridge into soldiering on.
