pleaseLogin to post Have lost our manual. How do we fix this Thanks SarahIf you did not, then your contract is with the Store you bought it from and NOT Bosch and you should be contacting them and they should sort the problem. A blockage, can sometimes be solved by putting one of those dishwasher cleaning tabs in the machine a couple of times and see if that sorts the problem for you. I suggest do that first it is the cheapest option and then if that does not work ring who you bought it from whether that be a retailer or Bosch themselves. I had service to open and remove a small plastic clip that had came into the machine accidently. I do not recognize that water was pumped back as you explain but if the water is not emptied may be this is the result.Any way to test if this is a circulation motor issue for sure I have tried to reset the machine, but I cannot switch the machine off as well Answer questions, earn points and help others. Therefore Pull out the mains plug, sever and dispose of the power cord. Destroy the door lock so that the door can no longer be closed. The water is softened with salt regeneration salt in the water softening system of the dishwasher. Refill with rinse aid. The rinse aid is required for stainfree utensils and clear glasses. Use only rinse aid for domestic dishwashers. To prevent injuries, place long, pointed implements and knives on the knife shelf.Pour detergent into the dry detergent dispenser 1R only insert tablet flat, not on its edge. Dosage see manufacturer's instructions on the packaging. The graduated detergent dispenser 1R helps you add the correct amount of powder or liquid. The corresponding programmes for your appliance can be found on the fascia. Type of utensils Type of soiling pots and pans, very adhesive burned nonsensitive in or dried on food utensils remnants containing and cutlery. This ensures that the appliance is quickly available for use again. <http://www.7pub.pl/7b/userfiles/compaq-series-4110-kvm-manual.xml>

The following overview will help you locating the causes and gives helpful advise to eliminate them. Spilled rinse aid causes excessive frothing, therefore please remove with a cloth. Contact details can be found on the back cover of this instruction manual or in the enclosed customer service list. Please dispose of the individual parts separated according to type. Please ask your dealer or inquire at your local authority about current means of disposal. This is the only way you can protect your children from potential dangers. To open the door, move lever to right and pull door handle. Theres a loud humming noise when timer reaches the wash part of the cycle Broken motor windings Everything else appears to be OK, i.e. fill and drain and timer. So got on to Bosch an arranged an engineer visit Brent Cross store referred me to Bosch. This machine is more expensive than some fullsize units. This is the second machine of this model I have had in which the main pump has failed, after a period of use which I regard as less than a fullservice life. The first one, purchased in 2003, the motor failed in 2006 and was replaced at cost to me and the machine went on till 2009 when the timer failed. I believe that these motors have been value engineered to the point of absurdity meaning that they always run slightly overheated and it is this which causes the windings to pop. I understand that they have now produced a replacement model. I wonder how reliable this is going to be And the price of labour is enough write off most home appliances. The lCustomer Service lady I spoke to at Bosch did say that sight of this letter by the attending Bosch engineer would be sufficient to ensure that I did not have to pay for the repair. We will see ! This latter agreement would be commercially confidential and therefore not available for general distribution If push came to shove, I might have to go to court to establish the existence of guarantee rights with Bosch, although I would imagine that the industry standard contract must have a specific term to allow these rights to flow down to me. No such luck. The bloke spent half an hour playing with the controls The machine was still connected to services and diagnosed what I had already told them over the phone three days earlier that the motor for the pressurised water supply to the wash rotor had gone. To be specific, the bearings on the motor have worn causing it to run outside tolerances and seize. Talk about have a dog and bark yourself. Got the impression that this guy was either a franchisee or independent subby. They just don't know the meaning of the word. I must have been well and truly distracted that week. Hopefully they will honour it as long as I've got Proof of purchase. We will see ! I wonder if they get paid twice for making two trips rather than one The second year is their way of obtaining details to push through a third party warranty for the following years, but registration is required for the second year. Chances are you don't put enough salt into the softener and so the motor seals have been attacked by the hard water and allowed leakage through the seals into the bearing. If you live in a soft water area then most probably failed seals. As you say you have had motor issues before with your dishwasher suggests you don't use enough salt. Do you wait for the oil light to come on before checking your engine for oil. I thought not. Machines used to last as they were more expensive in real terms. Machines now are built to the price the public will pay. If you want a better quality machine then pay more for something like a Miele. If there are any, the water softener should ideally be replaced as well. You don't change the engine oil without changing the oil filter. However, the water softener has a variable control which has always been set to the rating supplied on the water companies Three valleys website one short of the max setting. Not that you can normally expect this sort of thing to happen in mass produced items.... cough....Toyota. The sight of the operator controlling and guiding a machine to build the motor windings on conventional electric motor was a sight truly to behold.

Why kickoff by putting them off your brand You should also be refilling the salt chamber back to max weekly so as when you forget to top it up the salt is still present in enough quantities to be able to clean the resin within the softener. Ignore also the junk the multi tabs spout. You still need salt regardless. Yes you get odd lemons, but 2 separate machines needing 3 motors within not too long a time in total tells the story. It is a niche market machine and one day will be binned altogether as the costs of production over volume sold mean it is an expensive item for what it is. They will go the same way as the top loading washing machines, trust me. They will go the same way as the top loading washing machines, trust me. My pattern of usage and treatment of the machine has not changed once a day usage, the occasional heavily soiled item is handwashed beforehand and the machine subject to a major clean out every two months. I may be wrong, but I wouldn't have thought that there would not be a calcium deposit buildup round the impeller as the water at this location is turbulent. Generally, items in solution tend to drop out of solution and form deposits in still or slow moving water conditions. Only if the solution is supersaturated with a chemical would deposits form in moving water as there's no film on the crockery after a wash, I conclude it's not supersaturated. The impeller that was taken out of the first machine I had when the motor was replaced was clean as a whistle. Would the chemicals in the salt, in the absence of calcium, start electrophoretically exchanging with the substance of O-ring seals on components leading to a breach in water containment. A bit like the effect of synthetic oil on some carburation seals in car engines.

Interestingly, even though the motor is a high current item and is positioned at the lowest point in the cabinet, where all water leaking from the cabinet and other devices would naturally trickle down to, the motor has NO PROTECTIVE CASING. You'd have thought that in order to get an import license and type approval by the relevant authority that the motor would have to have a fully enclosing case and be DOUBLE INSULATED or be positioned high up the casing and remote from the sump. Also the dishwasher chassis and casing cladding are also all metal. So no chance there of the customer being electrocuted by an arcing seized motor. Not good. The engineer turned up. So, I've had to arrange another day for next Tuesday. So far, I've had one engineer to diagnose, and one to attempt fix the fault a sign of the changed economic circumstances since 2006. The salt is used to flush the resin clean, but hey ho. The salt is used to flush the resin clean, but hey ho. I was under the impression that the salt operated rather like soap to cause hardness to precipitate out of solution. In fact, looking at this American site confirms what you just said i.e. the resin does the softening by making the calcium stay in solution and the salt replenishes the resin's capability to do this. I presume it can't go on for ever being replenished by the salt. Sounds like a right load of BS to me. Tested and all OK. Motor windings seemed OK. If they made the sides solid it would probably weigh 5lbs. I think what's happening is that, for some reason the plastic seal is stiffening and shrinking and allowing some leakage. But only after 9 months. According to the machine serial number it was manufactured in 2009 perhaps old stock part was drawn from the bin on the day it was made. Why did the electrical registration authority CENELEC spot it before they dispensed their kite mark equivalent. I don't think it could have been missed out in manufacture without causing serious leakage. Salt is not the softener.

He indicated that the life of the resin was long provided the salt was kept topped up. He said, no. Water generally gets through the mechanical seal, following the shaft and through the bearing. I know where I set mine and every dishwasher I attend. The hardness occurs naturally and is characterised by the presence of high levels of calcium and magnesium, which are good for healthy teeth and bones. Hello I have a Bosch SKT5102GB Table Top Dishwasher which is about 5 years old. It still appears to work ok but it is not cleaning the dishes as well as it used to. I have cleaned out the filters and the water inlet does not seem to be blocked with limescale. Any ideas what the problem could be. Submitted 11 years ago. Verified Hiya, Well start with the basics, if its no better after doing the following, get back to me. Check the spray arms and ensure that the holes are clear of any food particles, especially the end holes. Set the spray arms at front to back position then set the machine going, when its washing, quickly open the door and see if the arms are moving. Make sure the water level is correct and make sure its heating up properly. If the water level looks low, add a jug of water and see if it improves. Let me know what you find Hope this helps Thanks Ask Your Own UK Appliance Question Customer reply replied 11 years ago Hi, thanks for the answer, please can you let me know how to tell if the water level in the dishwasher is correct. UK Appliance Technician Techdesk, Field Service Engineer replied 11 years ago Hiya, If its just over the filter then the level is low. You need to have enough water in to supply the spray arms. Ill see if Ive got the service manual for this one, there may be information on water levels there. Thanks Ask Your Own UK Appliance Question UK Appliance Technician Techdesk, Field Service Engineer replied 11 years ago Hiya, Sorry, the only thing in the service information is a wiring diagram.
